

We celebrate International Literacy Day on September 8. Watch the video, and read along with Filomena as she narrates the video.

What's your dream?

Today is International Literacy Day. A day when we can reflect upon this year's theme: what will literacy teaching and learning look like in the COVID-19 crisis and beyond?

(<https://www.un.org/en/observances/literacy-day>)

As part of today's celebration, UNESCO wants us to "reimagine the literacy teaching and learning of youth and adults in the post-COVID-19 era." So, today, we ask, "What is your dream?"

Maybe our favorite stories from childhood encouraged us to start dreaming big--even to be superheroes--and those big dreams lasted into adulthood.

Maybe we dream about a better world for ourselves and our families.

Literacy, education – these can help us get there.

Maybe you dream about what our community might look like in the future, how we can stay connected, virtually, and, later, how we will finally be able to be safe and together again.

But, regardless of what YOUR dreams are, we, at the Adult Literacy Program, have one big dream: to see our students achieve theirs.

What's your dream?

Write about your dream. It could be for yourself, for your family, for our community or for our country. Share it in class or post it to the Forum on this ALP Online website.